Gun Buried in Buckingham

Charlottesville, December 5—The city has come into the possession of a Yank's Gun, the gift of Dr Paul Barringer, ex Chairman of the faculty of the University of Virginia and former president of Virginia Polytechnic Institute It has been placed in Jackson park, at the foot of the equestrian statue of General "Stonewall" Jackson, recently presented to Charlottesville by Mr. Paul Goodloe, McIntire.

The cannon was captured by General Lee's army and used by the confederate chieftain till just before his surrender when it was buried by Lee's men. For years after the war the "grave" was decorated by confederate women who thought 'a Confederate soldier was buried there

"Some thirty years ago, about memorial Day," said Dr. Barringer, "I was driving from Farmville to Shepperds, in southern Buckingham county, along the road on which Lee's army retreated to Appomattox The school girls of Farmville had recently decorated many of the graves scattered along this route and my companion Mr. Cleveland Elcan, pointed out one of the decorated graves and stated that it was a fake grave, as no soldier was buried there, but a field piece which he had seen buried a few days before Lee's surrender. I expressed a desire for such a gun and then forgot the episode. Some years later, when again at his home, he showed me this gun in his farm Blacksmith shop and said it was mine, and that he would send it over, which he did some months later.

"An examination of the gun showed that it was cast at Pittsburg in 1861, doubtless by the Federal authorities, and hence it must have been captured by the confederates at some later period. The carriage of this gun had been burned, I was told, in the woods near the 'grave', and the fake name on the 'grave' was 'Corporal——of Georgia' It was buried less than a week before the surrender because of a lack of horses to pull it. As I recall, Mr. Elcan said he was some 10 or 12 years old when he saw the gun buried on or near his fathers' place. He was an absolutely reliable man. The gun had seemingly been 'spiked' at some time and the touch-hole rebored. To prevent accidents, I filled it with chicken wire and cement.
